

The growing trend over the past 20 years of media consolidation has caused an increase in homogenized news, music, and television programming. The remaining ownership restrictions are barely enough to keep corporate giants like Clear Channel in check. In fact, it is my sincere belief that we need to be going in the reverse direction, with more restrictions limiting the number of media outlets that can be owned as well as limiting cross-media ownership.